A Word From the Chair

Latin America's economies have rebounded from the pandemic crisis and remain on the road to recovery from the economic impacts of the Covid-19 pandemic. Nearshoring and supply chain diversification continue to drive investment across the region, and Latin America's economies are well positioned to benefit from the ongoing shift in global supply chains. Cross-border investment and trade between Latin America and the United States remain robust, and Latin America's economies are well positioned to benefit from the ongoing shift in global supply chains.
