Runners-Up and Shout Outs

► Also landing a runner-up spot is a team at Latham & Watkins that got a ruling upending a proposed false advertising class action accusing Peloton of misrepresenting its catalog of on-demand fitness classes. U.S. District Judge Lewis Liman in Manhattan last week found the proposed lead plaintiff, Eric Fishon, repeatedly impersonated a lawyer in correspondence with Peloton in the run-up to the lawsuit and later gave misleading testimony during his deposition that was “evasive at best” and “perjurious at worst.” The Latham team, which also scored a ruling from Liman knocking out claims brought on behalf of a proposed class of Michigan consumers, includes partners Steve Feldman, William (BJ) Trach, William Reckler, Lilia Vazova and Jooyoung Yeu; and associates Alexis Godfrey, Megan Behrman, Lemay Diaz, Andrej Novakovski, Elizabeth Sahner, Cameron Sinsheimer, Caroline Rivera, Caroline Marshall, Lydia Franzek, Katie Garcia, Larry Hong, Ben Herrington-Gilmore and Denver Dunn.

► Shout out to Greg Sobolski, Gabriel Bell and Rick Frenkel and their team at Latham. The Federal Circuit this week issued a ruling clearing way for their client Duolingo to proceed with a declaratory judgment action in the Northern District of California against a company claiming the language teaching app infringes patents related to font displays.
